Who will attend in 2016?

PRIDoC 2016, November 27th until December 1st, provides an indigenous space, for indigenous doctors, medical students, health professionals, health researchers and medical educators from around the Pacific to discuss ideas, action and evidence that is transforming indigenous health.

Talking about Transformation

We are no strangers to transformation. It has been part of our land and seascape and our histories for generations. Today, once again we face the need to talk about transformation to improve the health of our communities.

Why become involved?

Indigenous health is critically important in our various jurisdictions from Australia, Canada, the USA, Hawai'i, Taiwan, the many island nations of the Pacific and here in Aotearoa New Zealand.

We face similar challenges to our future health development, and we want to share solutions that will bring benefits to individuals, communities and our countries.

PRIDoC provides an opportunity for you to engage with this vibrant network and join our conversation about transforming indigenous health.

About PRIDoC

Indigenous Medical Associations from around the Pacific meet to share experiences and ideas, research and interventions, and to build an international network of change at student, graduate and specialist levels.

Indigenous doctors have been building a community of practice since 2002.

Be part of the transformation
